Take Action: Tell your members of Congress to provide emergency funding for family engagement

The House of Representatives is quickly working to release a new proposal to address the COVID-19 crisis. The National Center for Families Learning (NCFL) has joined forces with family engagement partners to alert Congress to the need for emergency funding for Statewide Family Engagement Centers (SFEC) in the next COVID-19 relief package.

As you know, now, more than at any other time, families are critical and primary to the success of their children. With schools across the nation temporarily shuttered and stay at home orders still in place, home is the classroom and parents have become surrogate teachers. The long-term ramifications of this crisis will be felt long after students return to school. The need for both immediate and long-term investments in high-impact family engagement is clear. As the House of Representatives moves quickly on their next relief bill, they must recognize the important role of parents and families in a child’s education and boost the SFEC program.

To amplify the need for more Statewide Family Engagement Centers, please add your voice to the chorus by sending a message to Congress through this link. Please note, you can edit the message to your liking.
